Animals are in the news—overwhelmed dog breeders, humans attacked by exotic animals kept as pets, and aggressive behavior in certain breeds of dogs that have resulted in injuries to humans. This information-rich seminar reviews recent laws passed in Oregon that govern exotic and dangerous animals, including imposing strict liability on owners of dangerous dogs and requiring permits for dangerous animals. An animal law expert takes a look at the administrative, city, and county code regulations, as well as breed-specific restrictions and their impact. You will also get a nationwide review of recent state cases involving dangerous dogs and the ownership of and liability for exotic animals.

Using short clips from a variety of movies over the decades, an animal law expert guides you through the myriad problems that tend to arise in litigation involving animals. The problems are both procedural (at the pleading, discovery, evidence, and trial stages) and substantive (tort, contractual, and equitable theories of recovery and defense). This cinematic perspective will increase your understanding and appreciation of the aesthetics, emotions, and realities involved with handling animal legal issues.
